The Sons of Fantasy
Chapter XII: The Final Days

"Tell me, papa; who is the greatest adventurer of our times?" asked the little boy from the city of Stanton, capital of the Dalmatian Empire.

"That is an easy one, my son; for only one such man rides today who may challenge the fabled heroes of old. From across the vast seas to the south came a rider; nay, a warrior. With the edge of his sword he felled the many evils in his way, until he came to the Kairim Pass in the rolling Scarlet Hills. As did the legendary Lord Karldaband before him, this great Knight rode alongside his company of brave friends and companions, who in time became known as the Sons of Fantasy.

"What kind of man was he, papa?"

"He was no man! He was of the ancient race, the mystical and crafty race of the Elves. Yet unlike the great Immortals such as the Evil Roumann or the Just Loren, this proud warrior is doomed; for one day his time will come and he shall lay down his arms and sleep forever beneath the skies.

"But that is many years away. I was telling you of his valiant deeds. Yes, it was he, who upon the capture of the evil fort called Dragonkeep, felled the vile worm who dwelled within. And as he rode onward, it was he who along with his friend Lord Boromir, cleansed the Castle Ravenloft of its evil master, Strahd Van Zarovich.

"Many tales may I tell you, my son; of the slaying of Shem, of the daring adventure in our very own empire, inside Dryer Mob in distant Akania. Of tales of hidden tombs and great giants he fought. But perhaps I shall save these for another night, for the day grows old, and darkness shall fall soon. Yet it is enouph to say that it is only he who has fought the powerful Southron known as Manda and lived to tell of it."

"Who is this hero, papa?"

"I speak of Sir Aquilius Lief the Cavalier; and since the foul times that besieged his party in God forsaken Moria, I know little. The last time he was seen was as he rode off, his loyal servant at his side, to seek his fate."

"Onward!" ordered Willian, his tired brow dulling his sharp features and dimming his alert eyes, "We can mourn the loss of our fallen upon the open fields of Eregion, or we'll never mourn at all."

They listened, and the tired party turned towards their guide and followed. There were only six of them now, and there had been twelve at Durin's Gate.

Ahead scurried Kipox the Sharper and his pet orc, Og. Behind stalked Willian and Wronchy, along with the monk Barabajjaggal and Ravenoke the druid.

Silence. They walked on. Darkness. For twelve hours they marched undounted, until they reached an inhabited section of the dwarven city; the orcs had formed a thieve's town in the far mines.

With a few slit throats and much running, the party crossed the area and escaped, with only the loss of one of the new members, Barley the Brawler.

The five of them went on. The air seemed fresher, suddenly, as they approached a great door. The gloom lifted for a second, and hope glimmered on their faces. They rushed forward, bursting through the doors, and found a great stairway going down. They raced onward, panting, exhausted and starving, until they reached the bottom landing. Setting his hands on the doors, Willian thrust them wide, letting in a sea of bright, golden, blinding sunlight and fresh, cool air!

"Thank the Gods for this!" exclaimed Ravenoke.

"No! Thank me!" muttered Og.

But perhaps the greatest joy of all came as Sir Warren, clad in shinning armour, walked towards them, smiling, his hand held out.

"Glad you made it! My Gods spared my soul in return for my loyal service to Chivalry, and put my spirit in this living vessel of life you see before you."

At the base of a sparkling waterfall half a mile from the looming gates of Moria the party made camp. All night they talked, discussing their fate beside the flickering flames of a sparking fire. As they slept memories of great times and glory of days gone by swept through their dreams; dreams of a time that had faded into memory.

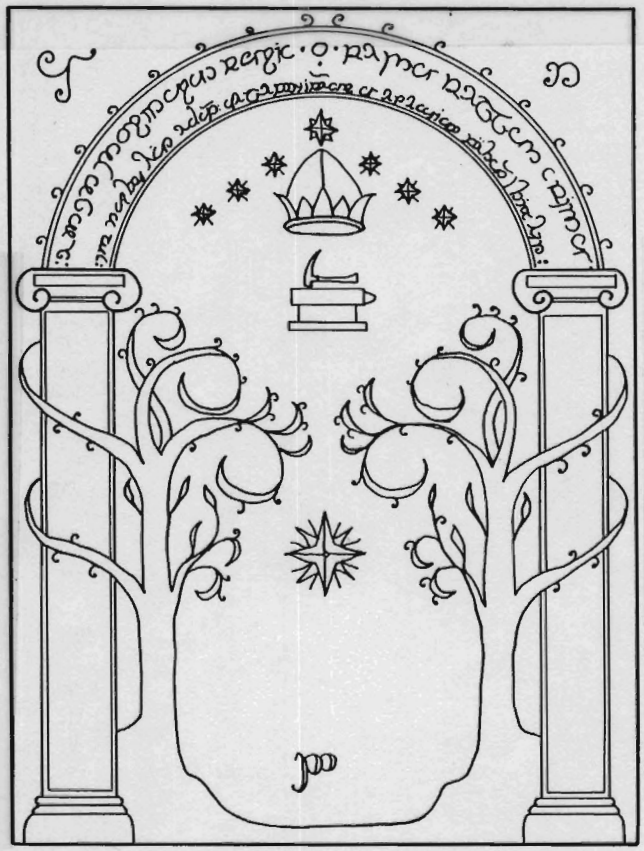

They gathered their gear at dawn, and rode off across the rolling fields south. Above the peaks to their right the sun rose, casting its golden rays out upon a new day; a new life for some: for these horsemen were no longer the proud and renowned Sons of Fantasy. They were no more then a seasoned lot of adventurers, riding their way as others ride their's.

It is said that days later Willian, alone, returned to Moria and rescued his friend Boromir from the hands of the Scavengers through his cunning and guile.

But the fingers of death had not lost their grip, for the two were taken by werewolves the night after and Lord Boromir of Minas Tirith, son of Denethor and would-be King of Barovia, was slain.

Those who fall in Khazad-dum are not meant to walk again beneath the sun.

Here is written in the Feanorian characters according to the mode of Beleriand: Ennyn Durin Aran Moria: pedo mellon a minno. Im Narvi hain echant: Celebrimboro Eregion teithanti thiw hin.

Date : Summer 6th, 3111n
Time : First (dawn)

You are all brutally awoken as Loria shouts, raising the alarm.

You jump up, and scan the area; about you are the rising peaks of the surrounding moutains and the slope where your camping, beneath which lies a forrested valley.

You turn and gaze in the direction of Loria's hand, but see nothing. Her keen eyes are staring at a distant point in the air.

"Chimera." she says, drawing her gleaming longsword.

NOTES:

1/All stats at max. See me for XP from last adventure, and tell me if you think you progressed in a skill.
2/If you follow the Telimnel Trail you'll end up in the Sinland Forest above Arina. If you enter the valley below you're lost. If you go back a few miles, you'll be at the slaver's stockade. So?
3/Everybody needs to update my copy of your character. Sooner done, sooner we start.
4/Any questions about the Field Guide to my world? Or your character or its NPC's? Too bad.
5/Good luck.

2. All armor, of any sorts, must be comparable to actual armor. All armor must be approved by Todd (armor coordinator)
3. Padded sections are the only parts of a weapon allowed to do damage. All sections of weapons must be padded if they ever come in contact with the opponent.

3b. Non-metal weapons cause only 1 hit at most, no matter where they strike. Contact on metal armor causes no damage.

4. A blow to the head heals the recipient 1 hit even if he is wearing a helmet.

4b. If an opponant is injured, all fighting him must stop until he is better.

5. A blow to the chest or stomach inflicts 2 hits. A blow to the lower or upper back causes 2 hits, or 3 if the opponent is surprised.
6. A blow to the neck causes no damage.
7. A blow to the arms, legs, butt or shoulders does 1 hit of damage.

7b. If a weapon breaks during battle it is no longer a legal arm.

7c. Full swings are not allowed unless their force & speed are reduced & slowed respectively.

8. Argument concerning whether or not a strike did damage or not is up to the victim. If there is continuous doubt, see rule #16.
9. All players start with 3 hits. When these are gone, they are "dead" for 15 minutes. They must fall in place and stay there for the full time. After that they may start again at one less hit. (a guy with 3 who dies, comes back with 2). Anyone reduced to 0 by this process is out of the battle until it ends.
10. Every time an opponent is slain, the champion gains 1 hit to his total, and is "healed" 1 hit for every hit he inflicted on his victim. Note that he is 'healed' 5 minutes after slaying his victim.
11. Anyone who leaves the boundaries, by any means, is slain. (as #9)
12. Fighters may use any weapons or combinations thereof approved by the weapon coordinators.
13. Clerics may only employ single-handed weapons. (a fighter /cleric may also employ a shield)

13b. Thrown weapons inflict only 1 point of damage and must contact the body portions listed in rule #5.

14. Magik is based upon the Mage's Guild and the Holy Church's decisions. For further info consult members of either Order.

14b. Magicians may employ any single-handed weapon in their opposite hand, or a dagger in their normal hand. Magician/fighters may use any single-handed weapon or a quarterstaff.

15. Knights must be called 'sir' on the battlefield, and please use their battle names.

16. Any cheating must be brought to the attention of the Order of Knights. Serious breeching of rules may result in expulsion from our battles.

17. The Order of Knights is in full control of all rules and regulations, excepting all Magikal or Clerical powers which are left to their respective Orders. However, the Order of Knights must approve all such rules. Any suggestions should be told to a Knight in order for them to ever get accepted.

17b. The Lord of the Knights is allowed to choose a squire from among the best of the unknighted. This squire must serve the Lord by defending him in battle, carrying his equipment and helping him prepare for battle. In return, the squire is allowed an opportunity to become a Renegade Knight or a Honorable Knight after every third Great War.

18. The Guild of Mages is in full control of all Magiks and the priveleges of its hierarchy, understanding that any decisions must be approved by the Order of Knights.

19. The Holy Church has the same powers untowards itself as the Mage's Guild.

BATTLE-HINTS

Use the environment to its fullest. Run if injured. Save your "healings" for those who need it. Always have some form of objective or goal. Stay on the offensive. Win.
