THE ADVENTURE LOG MAGAZINE
NUMBER 18

The Renegades
Chapter I:Arina

A warm wind was running its way up the valley as the sun rose to mid day, leaving little shade beneath the rocky slopes of the Weatherpeak Mountains. Summer had just begun, and so had the journey of a small group of adventurers that made their way slowly up the old Targon Trail. At their head was a mighty warrior whose standard was adorned with a mounted Griffon, and nearby came an Elf with green eyes and sharp features. Behind rode a fair Elven Ranger and a wise Druid of many years experience. At the rear a scruffy looking Hobbit rode on a sheep and bickered with an Orc who trotted quickly beside.

These were the remnents of a once great adventuring group known as the Sons of Fantasy. Since their ill-fated journey through the mine shafts of Khazad-dum many had left and others died. Thus was the predicament of this band, now called the 'Renegades'.

The mountains around were grey, and their slopes treacherous. The creatures of night abounded once the sun was no longer upon the hills, and the weather alone was oft enouph to fell travellers in wintertime. But the party was prepared, led by the skill of Loria, their tracker. They headed south, away from the lowlands of Zhan and towards South Akania on the far side of the mountains.

Four days they travelled, and though they were twice assaulted and once Kipox the Halfling was taken prisoner by the Dwarves of Hailstorm ("Damn Dwarves!" muttered the Hobbit), they arrived safely at the far end of the Targon Trail. Here the path led through an ancient tunnel of stone, and here brigands were known to waylay travellers.

"Hand us your money!" came a voice from behind a pile of rocks.

"Leave us be or face the sword of Sir Warren of Gorgmir!" answered the Cavalier, his hand on his sword hilt. The only reply was the scampering of feet as the rogues ran off.

As they entered the great tunnel, they were assaulted by a party of Orcs. With a charge Sir Warren rode through them, driving his lance home with an easy thrust. Willian drew his swords and severred the heads of two Orcs, whilst Kipox went to work on those who strayed aside.

Seconds later the party was standing about a pool of blood and dead bodies, looking lazily about. But then from the far end of the tunnel two men approached: one a great barbarian and the other a fighting man. They talked, and then joined the party so as to travel together to the Wayward

City; Arina.

Many days passed as they journeyed towards the White River, though little befell the party. Through the ancient Sinland Forest they went, until they came upon the rushing rapids of a great river. Sir Warren paused awhile, gazing into the foaming waters, and thought: "It has been many a day since last I saw this river. I believe 'twas the height of winter when we rode along the bank northward to slay the evil Mazaera and save the town of Bywater. Ah, Dremia was there. And so was the brave Boromir. And there we laid Elric to rest. Those were greater days; moments of a happier time."

So it was that the Renegades arrived at Arina by moonlight on Summer 11th. Many tales are told of this night, and the truth is perhaps best kept secret. What is known is that the barbarian and his friends were chased from the city for murder, and so were Kipox and Willian as they searched for the Halfling's father. The Hobbit returned safely, for no one could recognize him, and trained to become a true Thief. The others, with Sir Warren, passed the days resting and enjoying the peace that follows a storm. And thus they heard, one late night at the 'Tavern of the Labour Party', a minstrel sing a mournful tune:

Though Dragons he fought and vampires he slew,
Though Goodness he sought and in greatness grew,
Though Kingdoms he wrought and power he knew,
It is not in Glory that Lord Borimir fell.
The Evils that are heard from near and afar
That Lord Boromir, King of Borovia,
Had fallen in the Darkness of Khazad-dum.
In life great friends he had made, and
A wife and lands he had once saved did not Forget their debt to their dear Boromir.
Thus it was that the crafty Willian stole
Back into the great shafty pavillion
That is known from here to Hell as Moria.
From the hands of his vile capters he Saved Lord Borimir, and carried him off.
But 'tis said that those who fall in Khazad-dum
Are not meant to walk at all beneath Star or Moon.
Thus Death sent a great host of Shadow-Wolves Across plain, stream, fire and ice to reclaim
His prize; the Great Lord Boromir of Borovia,
Destined to fall in the lonely shafts of Moria.
For hours did Willian do battle to save his friend,
Though in the end, the shield of Willian they did rend,
And Lord Boromir fell, never to walk again.
Though Dragons he fought and Vampires he slew,
Though Goodness he sought and in Greatness grew,
Though Kingdoms he wrought and power he knew,
It is not in Glory that Lord Boromir fell.

So sung the minstrel as the winds howled.

The Epic Adventures of the Sons of Fantasy

Chapter I:Berland

Within a small coastal kingdom wedged between the ominous Weatherpeak Mountains and the roaring Valek Sea, there lies a fair, ancient port where the automn leaves and grey skies are little noticed: these are the busy and colorful streets of Lark-Han, where the cries of street venders compete only with the screams of the many fishmongers.

Amidst all the bustle and activity of this old harbor, there lies nestled a small inn from which swings a placard in the wind. On this sign is a Salamander, and from within comes roaring lauphter and the pouring of ale, along with the music of a badly tuned lyre.

And on this day of late fall, there was an Elven warrior amongst the crowded bar stools and merry waitresses, as there had been for some time. He was handsome, with dark hair and brown, honest eyes and a red cloak draped over his shoulders. Beside him sat a drunken Dwarf, chatting idly with his mouth and grasping firmly the handle of a great hammer with his hand.

"Wells, Aquilius, how much longer do we haves to wait until your friends get here. I'm eager to be on the road, soes I can bash me some Orc skulls." asked the Dwarf, slouching.

"Not much longer, Oin. The Sons of Fantasy will be on their way shortly; but only the Gods know where we'll go! There's no adventure for miles around. But surely our Ranger, Rex, will find you an Orc or two." replied the Cavalier, soberly.

And all the while another warrior, clad in shining mail and white garments, watched intently from a table nearby. His face was fair, with blond hair and bluish eyes; this was Lance, loyal follower to his liege Aquilius of Argos and retired Dalmatian soldier.

Down the stairs came a beautiful lady, dressed in a long cloak and holding a great bow. She was of Elven linneage, but not pure; her hair was auburn, and her features sharp and attractive. As she reached the landing she stopped, staring across the room. She fell to one knee, drawing her bow, and shouted: "Aquilius, sir! Watch out! He's here!"

The bar room cleared as everyone ran. Lance drew his sword and rushed between his master and his enemy. Oin stumbled under a table and Aquilius turned and unsheathed his gleaming weapon. Across the room stood a tall, heavy set man bearing a two-handed sword that sparked with the intensity of its power. He spoke:

"So we meet again, Thief! Now you're in my territory, and here you'll die!"

"Dream on, braggart! You are no better than the son of a mangy cur, Manda."

Their swords met, and Aquilius gave a step, and then another as he blocked a mighty blow. Sweat ran down his face as their blades met and locked. The muscled assailant was stronger, and more powerful. But with a kick to his stomach, Aquilius threw him back, and they fell apart. Circling, they snarled at each other.

On one side of the room stood Aquilius' friends; Lance, Oin, Arwen and Rex who had run down from his room at the sounds of battle. On the other side, near the door, stood an ugly Gnome and two shady looking characters. All were ready to jump in if their master lost.

Tirelessly they circled; Manda with a confident smile on his face and Aquilius assessing his opponent. Then suddenly he sprang forth and swung his longsword, a ring on his hand glowing blue. Manda blocked, but swayed under the force of the blow. Aquilius swung again, and again Manda fell back.

"Curse you!" he shouted, and with a clap of the Gnome's hands disappeared. His friends ran.

"Congratulations, sir!" said Lance.

"Once again you've proven yourself the better, Aquilius." announced Rex.

"Bah! He'sh just lucky he didn't fight me!" muttered Oin.

The next day the troop was joined by the Assassin and old friend Woodstock, who had been with the party since the days of Seaton and the death of his brother Garfag. With him came two georgeous women; the Princess Lydora and Midnight, along with a Dwarven fighter named Darwyn.

Together they wandered through the noisy town, spending their wealth and enjoying the last days of warmth before the fell winter. They neared the Old Port, and watched as great ships loaded their goods and set sail upon the great sea, and others as they docked and exchanged wares. The smell of fish and sea air was everywhere.

But then suddenly a great fog of mists roared up around Arwen, encircling her.

"Damn the Gods! 'Tis my father who beckons me!" she shouted.

Aquilius, Lance and Rex rushed to her aid, while Woodstock and his friends stayed indecifely.

"What the hell!" muttered Woodstock, as he jumped in, followed by Midnight and Darwyn. Lydora, however, ran off for fear of her life towards the palace of her father, Baron Zod.

As the gathered crowd stared, the mists faded, leaving nothing behind.

The party watched as their whereabouts became clear. Before their amazed eyes they beheld a Utopian paradise! An island in a sea of fog beneath a clear blue sky, covered by mountains and green forests. Near them a Greek pillar stood beside a keg of ale, and here and there walked servants on their various errands.

"This is my home, friends. Yonder lies the palace of my father, the King of Berland." stated Arwen, morosely.

As their eyes turned towards the mountains, they saw the palace; but this was no ordinary castle, but a white citadel as large as many cities and covering the peak of a high moutain. From its spiralling towers flew banners emblazonned with color and nobility.

That night they were presented before his majesty the king and shown to their quarters in a grand tower.

The following morning they spoke to Arwen's father, who answered their many questions.

"This land you're all in is part of another world. 'Tis said that the Gods created it, along with many similar ones, but abandonned them. Many years ago my forefathers discovered Berland, and ere long has my family dwelled here."

As the days went by, the adventurers explored the forgotten lower levels of the castle, slaying many a vile beast and finding much abandonned treasure. Though time passed merrily, the guests were eager to return home, and thus one bright morning they departed, laden with gifts (all save Rex, who met his death in a pit while adventuring) and arrived once again on the busy streets of ancient Lark-Han.

Happily they took a seat at the 'Salamander' and ordered a round for all. Just as they toasted their good fortune in this pub where tales are told and fortunes are lost, the first flakes of snow fluttered their way down from heaven on this 88th day of Autumn.

The -Renegades-
Wrapsheet

Ordway Street, October '85
Location: The city of Arina in South Akania
Date : Summer 43rd, 3111n
Time : First (dawn)

About you the city starts its day's business and the sun lights your small but confortable rooms at the 'Tavern of the Labour Party'. Late last night a messenger brought news of a glorious victory over Anor, and most of the city is celebrating with tournaments, free ale & dancing in the streets.

The barkeep, Grom, tells you of Aquilius as he passed through town weeks before you arrived, and of how he defeated the best warriors of the land in a competition. He also tells you that he met a Paladin and a Bard and travelled southeast down the White River.

NOTES:

1/If anyone wants an updated version of the 'Field Guide to Telrhin', please ask.
2/Need any back issues of the log? Look at the page towards the back of this issue and see which ones are left.
3/Does everyone have a luck roll?
4/Can anyone tell me which language is the common tongue of this region?
5/Good luck.

THE MYSTIC: A NEW PC CLASS

by Chris Aldridge
A PC class for my world of Telrhin (and any other foolish enouph to accept it).

The Mystic is the ideal class for those people who enjoy dabbling in magic, but who also love the craftiness of thieves. The Mystic, as a class, is an outcast; he is subclass to none yet not fully a class by himself. The Mystic also requires no training prior to 11th lvl, and thus has few guilds.

The Mystic is a combination of thief, monk and druidic wizard. He recieves all thieving skills listed on the chart at half his level, and is able to fight as a monk half his level (Martial Arts Skill). All levels rounded down. No other abilities from these two classes are granted them (i.e. backstabbing, AC, etc.). In addition to these skills, the Mystic is able to cast many spells.

A Mystic must be neutral in alignment (neutral good, neutral, neutral evil, chaotic neutral or lawful neutral).

The main attribute of a Mystic is Intelligence. The minimums are: Intelligence 18, Dexterity 12, Wisdom 10 and Constatution 10.

Dexterity 15+, Wisdom 12+ and Constatution 12+ earns a 5% bonus to given experience.

Mystics fight on the Monk's combat table and save as Clerics.

Mystics may be Human, Elven (max 10), or 1/Elven (max 12).

They may only employ knives, staves, scimitars, slings, nunchakus, sais, falchions or longswords if of Elven blood. They are restricted as Thieves in regards to Armor.

Mystics gain +1 dmg every 2 lvls.

The Mystic is required to carry a staff. In this staff is held much of the spell casting power of the Mystic. The caster must employ this staff whenever gesticulation is required in a spell. However, any spell castable at 2 levels below the Mystic's current level does not require the staff. If the staff is broken, these spells may not be cast, and no substitute may be used until a new staff is made. It takes 2 weeks of studious work to manufacture a Mystic's staff, during which time the Mystic may do nothing but eat & sleep.

MYSTIC TABLE I.

experience	lvl	d6	title
0-4000	1	2	Apprentice
4001-7,500	2	3	Breezeraiser

7,501-12,500	3	4	Breezemaker
12,501-20,000	4	5	Breezemaster
20,001-35,000	5	6	Windraiser
35,001-60,000	6	7	Windmaker
60,001-90,000	7	8	Windmaster
90,001-125,000	8	9	Stormraiser
125,001-200,000	9	10	Stormmaker
200,001-300,000	10	11	Stormmaster
300,001-750,000	11	12	Weather Watcher
750,001-1,500,000	12	12+2	Weather Lord
1,500,001-2,225,000	13	12+4	Weather Master
2,225,001-4,500,000	14	12+6	Grand Mystic

2,225,000 experience points for each additional level beyond 14th.

Mystics gain 6 hit points per level after 14th.

ADDITIONAL SKILLS (TREATED AS SECONDARY SKILLS):
-Astrology 1.0
-Guild Signs 1.5
-Music 1.0

SPELL FORMS PER LEVEL:

1-Divination	5-Illusion/Phantasm
2-Abjuration	6-Enchantment/Charm
3-Alteration	7-Conjuration/Summoning
4-Necromantic	8-Evocation

DRUIDIC SPELLS PER LEVEL:

level	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
1	1
2	2
3	2	1
4	3	1
5	4	2
6	4	2	1
7	4	3	1
8	4	3	2
9	4	3	2	1
10	5	4	3	2
11	5	4	3	2	1
12	5	4	4	2	1
13	5	4	4	3	2	1
14	5	4	4	3	2	2	1

MAGICAL SPELLS PER LEVEL:

level	1	2	3	4

ILLUSIONIST SPELLS:

level	1	2	3	4

1								1
2	1							2	1
3	1							3	2
4	2							4	2
5	2							5	2	1
6	2	1						6	3	1
7	3	2						7	4	1
8	3	2	1					8	4	2
9	4	2	1					9	4	2	1
10	4	3	2					10	4	3	1
11	4	3	3					11	4	3	2
12	4	4	3					12	4	4	2
13	5	4	3	1				13	5	4	2
14	5	4	3	2				14	5	4	3	1

CLERICAL SPELLS PER LEVEL:

level	1	2	3	4	5	6
1	1
2	1
3	2
4	2	1
5	3	1
6	3	2
7	3	2	1
8	4	3	1
9	4	3	2
10	4	3	2	1
11	4	4	2	1
12	5	4	3	2
13	5	4	3	2	1
14	5	4	3	2	1	1

BACK ISSUES OF THE LOG

****
ENTURE LOG MAGAZINE - THE ADVENTURE LOG MAGAZINE - THE ADVENTURE LOG M
****

ISSUE NUMBER	# AVAILABLE
#01	1
#02	2
#04	3
#05	1
#11	3
#16	1
#17	1

****
G MAGAZINE - THE ADVENTURE LOG MAGAZINE - THE ADVENTURE LOG MAGAZINE -
****

>The Medievil Wars<
Rules set by the Order of Knights

THIRD EDITION

1. All weapons must be approved by the weapon coordinators (John or Chris).
2. All armor, of any sorts, must be comparable to actual armor. All armor must be approved by the armor coordinator (Todd).
3. Padded sections are the only parts of a weapon allowed to do damage. All sections of weapons must be padded if they ever come in contact with the opponent.

3b. Non-metal weapons cause only 1 hit at most, no matter where they strike. Contact on metal armor causes no damage.

3c. Crossbows cause 2 hits vs. unarmored opponents and 1 hit vs. armored opponents. This only applies to body sections listed in #5.

4. A blow to the head heals the recipient 1 hit even if he is wearing a helmet.

4b. If an opponent is injured, all fighting him must stop until he is better.

5. A blow to the chest or stomach inflicts 2 hits. A blow to the lower or upper back causes 2 hits, or 3 if the opponent is surprised.
6. A blow to the neck causes no damage.
7. A blow to the arms, legs, butt or shoulders does 1 hit of damage.

7b. If a weapon breaks during battle it is no longer a legal arm.

7c. Full swings are not allowed unless their force & speed are reduced & slowed respectively.

8. Argument concerning whether or not a strike did damage or not is up to the victim. If there is continuous doubt, see rule #16.
9. All players start with 3 hits. When these are gone, they are "dead" for 15 minutes. They must fall in place and stay there for the full time. After that they may start again at one less hit. (a guy with 3 who dies, comes back with 2). Anyone reduced to 0 by this process is out of the battle until it ends.
10. Every time an opponent is slain, the champion gains 1 hit to his total, and is "healed" 1 hit for every hit he inflicted on his victim. Note that he is 'healed' 5 minutes after slaying his victim.
11. Anyone who leaves the boundaries, by any means, is slain. (as #9)
12. Fighters may use any weapons or combinations thereof approved by the weapon coordinators.
13. Clerics may only employ single-handed weapons. (a fighter /cleric may also employ a shield or a dagger in the other hand)

13b. Thrown weapons inflict only 1 point of damage and must contact the body portions listed in rule #5.

13c. Non-bladed thrown weapons inflict damage as #13b every other hit.

14. Magik is based upon the Order Arcane and the Holy Church's decisions. For further info consult members of either Order.

14b. Magicians may employ any single-handed weapon in their opposite hand, or a dagger in their normal hand. Magician/fighters may use any single-handed weapon or a quarterstaff.

15. Knights must be called 'sir' on the battlefield, and please use their battle names.

16. Any cheating must be brought to the attention of the Order of Knights. Serious breeching of rules may result in expulsion from our battles.

17. The Order of Knights is in full control of all rules and regulations, excepting all Magikal or Clerical powers which are left to their respective Orders. However, the Order of Knights must approve all such rules. Any suggestions should be told to a Knight in order for them to ever get accepted.

17b. The Lord of the Knights is allowed to choose a squire from among the best of the unknighted. This squire must serve the Lord by defending him in battle, carrying his equipment and helping him prepare for battle. In return, the squire is allowed an opportunity to become a Renegade Knight or a Honorable Knight after every third Great War.

18. The Order Arcane is in full control of all Magiks and the priveleges of its hierarchy, understanding that any decisions must be approved by the Order of Knights.

19. The Holy Church has the same powers untowards itself as the Mage's Guild.

Weapon Coordinator(s)
Chris A.
John S.

Armor Coordinator(s)
Todd M.

Order of Knights
Sir Force the Black
Sir Kenroe the Indigo
Sir William the Brown

Results of the 'Tregaron War: October '85':

Teams: Bobby, Jem, Jack & Terry vs. Alex, Nic, John, James & Sir William.

Victors: Bobby, Jack, Jem & Terry.

Titles: Terry defeated Bobby 3-0 and was knighted as Sir Force the Black.

Victims: Sir William-5 // John-3 // Bobby-3 // Jack-2 // Terry-2 // Alex-1 // Nic-1 // Jem-1

The Rat Page
>A Rodent's Look at our Campaigns<

by the Combat Rat himself

Crossbows take how long to load? Bows shoot how far? What the hell is the damage on my bow?...

Confused? I sure am. So, to clear it all up, here's a list of all info on bows and xbows alike in one convenient place:

bow	type	length	mass	range	dmg
greek bow	s	1.4m	.6kg	90m	d4
egyptian bow	c	1.2m	.7kg	130m	d6
assyrian bow	c	1.1m	.7kg	120m	d4
turkish bow	c	1.0m	.8kg	150m	d6
chinese bow	c	1.9m	.7kg	100m	d6
japanese bow	bt	2.1m	.9kg	90m	d6
long bow	s	1.8m	.7kg	90m	d6
short bow	s	1.2m	.6kg	90m	d4
apache bow	bk	1.0m	.5kg	70m	d4
mohave bow	s	1.7m	.7kg	70m	d4
stone bow	s	1.7m	.7kg	45m	d4

xbow	type	mass	range	shots/rnd	dmg siege arbalest -windless	s	8.2kg	80m	1	d12+1
heavy arbalest -windless	s	7.0kg	65m	1	d10+1
heavy arbalest* -cranequin	s	6.0kg	55m	1.5	d10+1
heavy arbalest* -screw & handle	s	7.5kg	60m	1	d10+1
medium arbalest* -goat's foot	c	3.8kg	50m	2	d8+1
medium arbalest -claw & belt	b	.7kg	40m	2	d6+1
medium arbalest -cord & pulley	b	.7kg	40m	2	d6+1
light arbalest* -cord & pulley	w	3.4kg	40m	2	d4+1
slurbow* -cranequin	s	.6kg	50m	1	d8+1
stone arbalest*	s	.7kg	30m	4	d4+1
chu-ko-nu	w	.6kg	60m	12	d4+1
Nayin	w	3.2kg	30m	4	d4+1
Thami	w	4.0kg	40m	4	d4+1

*may be used while mounted

Washington International School

Academic Referral Form

Student: the Sons of Fantasy Level: M2 Date. 3111 humedian

To the parent: This form is being sent to inform you of an academic problem which needs to be brought to your attention. It is our hope that corrective action can be taken before this situation worsens. Please discuss this problem with your son/~~daughter~~, and contact his/~~her~~ teacher or advisor if you have any questions or suggestions. We greatly appreciate your help.

Reasons for academic referral:

- ____ failing/near failing mark on major test
- ✓ unsatisfactory mark on major assignment
- ✓ failure to turn in major assignment
- ✓ repeated failure to turn in daily assignments
- ✓ unsatisfactory effort/attitude in class
- ____ repeated failure to bring necessary books and materials to class
- ✓ other: repeatedly proving how nerdy they are.

Additional comments:

The Illusionist
Teacher

Adventuring + the capture of Roumar.
Subject

Copy 1: Parent Copy 2: Dean of Students Copy 3: Homeroom Advisor